DANIEL WOLFE

Daniel Wolfe is a British director with a bold, subversive vision. Through his award-winning work in commercials, music videos and long-form films, he has gained a formidable reputation as a pioneer, consistently pushing the boundaries of his form.

Daniel has been a leading figure in music videos for nearly 15 years. He rose to prominence with a cycle of ambitious narrative videos. This included the gritty slasher “Time To Dance” for The Shoes, starring Jake Gyllenhaal as a hipster-slaying serial killer. It became an instant YouTube sensation and picked up two UKMVAs. His follow-up “Iron Sky”, an apocalyptic nightmare for Paolo Nutini, won the SXSW Grand Jury Award.

His feature debut “Catch Me Daddy” premiered to rave reviews at the Cannes Film Festival, picking up the Caméra d'Or, 5 BIFA nominations and Best Newcomer at the London Film Festival.

Daniel’s commercial work includes such brands as Hennessy, Libresse, Adidas, Mini or Channel 4. He has won British Arrows, Cannes Lions and numerous D&AD awards.

Daniel lives in Los Angeles.
